

A black and white photograph of a marble sculpture. The central focus is a woman's face, shown in profile, looking slightly downwards. The face is smooth and detailed, with visible features like the nose, lips, and eyes. Surrounding the face are intricate floral and leaf motifs, carved into the same marble. The lighting is soft, highlighting the texture of the marble and the curves of the face.

ECCENTRIC,
ICONIC.*

Home House

*London's most magnificent private members' club,
fusing 18th century splendour
with 21st century style.*

Established in the 18th century, Home House is named after the notorious Countess of Home, a Jamaican heiress who commissioned George III's architect James Wyatt to build a sophisticated palace purely for enjoyment and entertainment, at No 20 Portman Square.

Today, Home House hosts a collection of characters and individuals spread across three exquisite Georgian townhouses, offering an exceptional range of facilities including restaurants, bars, The Vaults, an intimate garden, elegant bedrooms, a boardroom, a gym and a thriving calendar of exclusive member's events.

The image shows a detailed view of the ceiling of Home House, featuring a large central medallion with a classical scene, surrounded by a ring of smaller medallions and a decorative border. The ceiling is painted in shades of light blue and green, with gold leaf accents.

A Flamboyant History

In 1773, the immensely grand Countess of Home, twice widowed, childless and extremely wealthy, made plans for a suitably palatial home in London to entertain Royalty as well as her glittering friends.

Robert Adam, one of the most celebrated architects of his day, was appointed in 1775 to complete the building. Home House is acknowledged as Robert Adam's finest surviving London town house, with one of the most breath-taking imperial staircases in European architecture.

The venue of the most illustrious parties of the 18th century high society, the House continues to be a shrine to hedonism today through its legendary member's parties.

Enchanting Opulence

Be transported to a different time and place. Each of the 23 luxurious bedrooms and suites has a unique story to tell, with features that include hand-painted silk wallpaper and shimmering gold ceilings.

The deep red marble in Lady Islington's bathroom comes from the same stone as that used in the star inlay in the floor in the centre of the dome in St. Paul's Cathedral, London. A bath made for His Highness Say Aji Rao III, Maharajah Gaekwad of Baroda (1863-1939) is now in the Duke of Atholl's suite on the third floor.

Our Club and Feature Rooms are the perfect place to rest your head after a busy day of meetings in the city, or look to one of our spacious suites for the ultimate luxury experience.
