ECCENTRIC,
ICONIC.

Home House

*London's most magnificent private members' club, fusing
18th century splendour with 21st century style.*

Established in the 18th century, Home House is named after the notorious Countess of Home who had originally commissioned George III's architect, James Wyatt, to build her a sophisticated palace purely for enjoyment and entertainment.

Today, Home House hosts a collection of characters and individuals spread across three exquisite Georgian townhouses, offering an exceptional range of facilities including restaurants, bars and lounges, an intimate garden, elegant bedrooms and a gym along with an exciting calendar of members' events.

A Flamboyant History

In 1773, the immensely grand Countess of Home, who was twice widowed, childless and extremely wealthy, made plans for a suitably palatial home in London to entertain Royalty as well as her glittering friends.

In 1775, the celebrated architect Robert Adam's was appointed to complete the interiors of the House, which is now acknowledged as his finest surviving London town house, with one of the most breath-taking imperial staircases in European architecture.

A venue of the most illustrious parties of the 18th century high society, the House continues to be a shrine to hedonism today through its legendary members' parties.
